I understand a meeting was held regarding Campaign Finance Laws (CFLs). A $ 5,000 threshold is being discussed or is being implemented? If that's the case, it is a step in the wrong direction. Colorado CFLs are anti-Constitutional. Stating otherwise is being oblivious to the written words or choosing to be oblivious with other motives.

I can speak firsthand on the vagueness and dangers of CFLs. Colorado permitted me to be sued for CFL violations for voicing my opinion on a matter that was in the idea stage. It didn't become a ballot issue until a later date. I was sued by the the party pushing the issue as an attempt to shut me up. It was plain for all to see yet CFLs allowed me to be horsed around. I was fortunate to get great council. That's going be rare for most. The majority of people will find they don't have the time or money to stand for their principles and will shy away, reserving political speech for the elites. You're not going to convince me that is what our framers had in mind.

I say it's a move in the wrong direction because you want to add to something that is an abismal mess. Cluttering it further is a mistake.
