Secretary of State
Mr Wayne's Williams

Sir:

I rarely have time in a busy day for any political correspondence, but after reading of your intent to make online/email voting as an option for other than the most hardship cases (ie military stationed abroad) I have to say I am alarmed. In light of so many headline hacks of institutions far more secure than email, I find it a bit naive for anyone to attempt to dup the voters into believing that this method is secure. When a site becomes profitable to hack, I assure you, it will be hacked, opening the door for fraud that will dwarf the methods that exist now. Honest, legitimate voting is so fundamental to our form of democratic government that I urge you to resist your continuation of efforts that will make election outcomes even more suspect than they are today.

Sincerely,

KML
