Subject: Internet voting

Dear Mr. Williams,
Expanding Internet voting is an ill-advised move. The next thing one will be hearing -- after Colorado has paved the way for yet another trendsetting measure that is ill-thought out and fraught with both known and unknown perils -- is that the entire database for Colorado voters has been hacked!

The Internet has become an increasingly unsafe place lately and there is no reason to believe that attacks on Internet privacy and actually hacking will become less frequent in the future. If we want to sell Colorado voters' rights to privacy down the tubes this would be a good first step to do it. And as we all know, every journey starts with that important first step.

All-mail ballots have done enough damage already. Please leave our voting rights alone and our rights to a secret ballot intact.
